

Wild Friday Nights: My Life in East Texas High School Football (Volume 1) by Mac Abney (2011-05-03)

East Texas high school official Mac Abney tells his often-hilarious, heart-warming tales about the boys who play the roughest game in the Lone Star State, and about the teams meeting in weekly rivalries resembling The Gunfight at the OK Corral. Most of all, Abney writes about the place he loves best; East Texas, the remote, 24,000-square mile corridor of pine trees crowded between Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma. Abney, an official for the Texas Association of Sports Officials, takes readers to the backwoods, to towns like Hooks, Joaquin, New Boston, Sims and Lovelady, where most Americans never go and can only imagine, towns where high school students number in the hundreds, but the passions run high. The night in 2009, when Abney worked a game at Chapel Hill High School, is typical for the book; the Chapel Hill Bulldogs and Athens High School Hornets fought each other on the field, fans joining in, when a very large man in a black trench coat stalked on the field. When Abney put his hands on the mans chest and suggested he return to the stands, the fan ripped his coat open and showed me a badge and two pearl-handled revolvers. Most of all, however, Wild Friday Nights touches the heart. Coaches step in for boys with permanently-absent parents, but some of those boys must look for a ride home after a game in which they have played superb football. This is a book about life, officiating high school football, Texas and boys, and will thrill anybody who cares about sports.
