

Spinner (Spun Again Tales)

Tomorrow morning I am going to die. My limbs are straight, my hair a dull, flaxseed brown magics curse doesnt touch me. I cant spin straw into gold any more than a magic user can escape deformity. Greta is trapped by a lie. When the king hears her fathers deceitful claim of her spinning magic, he takes her and promises to end her life if she cannot spin a room of straw into gold by morning. But then the mysterious, magical spinner comes. His nightly appearance saves her life and further tangles the web of lies she has woven for her survival. As Greta finds her heart slipping towards a love both dangerous and impossible, a question haunts her: how long will the charade last? A retelling of Rumpelstiltskin.
